HONGKONG, MARCH 2ND, 1893.

The bimetallic cause appears for the time being to be making headway. A motion has been passed by the House of Commons in favour of a bimetallic conference, a similar motion has been passed by the Reichstag, and the United States are in the throes of a convincing currency crisis induced by the unwise action taken in the demonetization of silver. In all the gold countries industries, particularly agriculture, are feeling the pinch of the contracted currency, a pinch which is approaching the point of strangulation. As an American paper puts it, "Gold is now the unit of value, the only money of final redemption." Is there a sufficient supply of gold? In other words, is there enough to maintain "prices"? Prices were established on a basis of about \$7,000,000,000 of money or "basis" in the old days. The old basis of \$7,000,000,000 shall be restored?" This seems a very fair statement of the case. But is there any probability of common action being taken among the commercial nations to restore the old basis? On this point an attitude of scepticism may well be excused, on the part even of the most ardent of theoretical bimetallicists. It would have been a simple matter to have prevented the rupture of the bimetallic tie; to restore it is quite a different thing. The old question of the ratio, which bimetallicists usually shun over, will be found a very difficult one to solve. If the creditor class are asked to accept ten shillings worth of silver in payment of a debt of a sovereign the movement will not command their support, and the new born zeal of the Lancashire operatives would soon evaporate if they were asked to accept their wages on that basis. But that is what the immediate restoration of the old ratio of 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ to 1 would mean. If, on the other hand, the market rate be adopted as the ratio things would remain much as they are except that we would have the assurance that we would not get worse, and it would be something to be thanked for if we could feel sure there was no further fear of the dollar falling to one-and-a-half pence, a shilling, or perhaps even ninepence. But the adoption of the market rate would not satisfy the silver party, and on this rock it is to be feared the proposed international conference will either break up altogether or be diverted into trying some ineffectual expedient to bolster up silver without frankly accepting it as money and according to it equally with gold the privileges of free coinage and unlimited legal tender. Any expedient of that kind would prove disastrous and add to our troubles. No good has been done by the experiment tried in India and time will probably bring great evils resulting from it, as they have been, the currency tickling in America. The value of the currency in America, with its silverbacks, its silver certificates, etc., etc., may be judged from the following passage in the President's message of the 18th January:

"The only way to the solution for preventing gold to be taken out of our hands. The only hands that can be taken out are authorized nearly 25 years ago and are not yet calculated, so we must use ours. Among other disadvantages they are made payable in gold, and the cost of gold is increased by the fact that the conditions do not allow us to increase the value of silver to that of gold as an investment. It is by no means a stain that the value of this description has long been held to be a mere fiction, but it is a stain of our Government."
